

ABSTRACT

A device for measuring exposure to radiations including at least a component for detecting photons including at least a component for detecting photons or particles associated with at least one circuit for acquiring and counting detection events. The response curve of the number of counted events versus the number of photons or particles sensed by each detection component is a monotonous increasing curve.